

The discovery that a child has a brain or spinal cord tumor changes everything. The future becomes uncertain; families struggle with anxiety and fear. A strong medical team can help a family take its first crucial steps forward. But reconstructing a life and nurturing a family devastated by the emotional and physical demands of treatment and its aftermath go beyond what a medical environment can provide.

That's where Making Headway comes in.

Making Headway funds quality-of-life services and programs that make a child's hospital stay more comfortable for the whole family, enhancing the excellent care provided by doctors, nurses and staff. From stocking a playroom with toys, games and arts-and-crafts supplies to supporting a child-centered yoga instructor, massage therapist, wellness coordinator and other caring professionals—we transform the nature of hospital visits.

Our high level of support continues once the hospital stay has ended. Making Headway's Ongoing Care program provides therapists, educational specialists, bereavement counselors and other professionals to help families cope with a world where everything has changed. Through individual counseling and hands-on, practical assistance these experienced experts empower every member of the family.

And in a field that receives limited support, Making Headway funds basic medical research, clinical trials, training fellowships and more. We're proud to be currently helping to fund the creation of a new dedicated neuro-oncology research laboratory at the NYU Langone Medical Center.

Making Headway Foundation continues to expand its mission to care, comfort and cure—but in order to give our support, we need your support. Your ongoing generosity makes our services a reality for families in need and plays a vital role in our ability to make a difference.
