

Children diagnosed with a brain or spinal cord tumor need the best possible medical care—that goes without saying. But the children and their families need so much more. They need care and comfort during the course of their treatment and long-term support during the challenging years that follow. It was this realization that inspired the founding of Making Headway Foundation more than twenty years ago. For nearly a quarter century, Making Headway has pushed the limits of what services are “necessary” in order to treat children as more than just patients, supporting them and their entire families in overcoming the social, medical, educational, and psychological challenges that stem from illness and the side effects of treatment.

We’re pleased to have made a difference for thousands of families, and proud that the success of our approach has changed the way many hospitals view patient care. Today, we continue on the vanguard, funding hospital-based services from massage therapy to yoga, follow-up services from educational consulting to family counseling, and cutting-edge research. We are constantly re-evaluating and expanding our work: we are stepping up our advocacy role, partnering with other organizations to fund still more innovative research, and expanding our educational services to hospitals across the region.

But there is always so much more that we can do. The math is simple: the more financial resources we have, the more families we can help and the more ways we can help them. Your ongoing kindness and generosity keep our vital services going and help us continue to grow.
